Back-to-School

It's hard to believe, but summer has drawn to a close and kids of all ages are heading back-to-school.

Whether you are seeing a kindergartner off for the first time, dealing with a first time high-schooler, moving a recent grad into the dorms, or are going back to school yourself, we're sure you'll find the following websites helpful in making the transition.

kidshealth.org is a great site for back to school resources. It has separate portals for kids, teens, and parents. It covers first day separation anxiety, choosing the right college, and all the steps and milestones in between.

The Princeton Review, www.princetonreview.com has tons of resources for high school, college, and graduate students. The Princeton review is famous for its test prep materials, but the website also includes a college/grad school search, career information and statistics, as well as tons of articles guiding students through the college process from school selection to graduation. All of the articles and search engines are free with registration.

furtheryoureducation.com is a site devoted to adult students from all walks of life. Whether you're thinking about an Associate's degree or an MBA, this site is sure to have some helpful information. This site also pays special attention to distance learners, transfer students, and military members.

September's Featured Site: Bell's General Store

Summer is beginning to wind down, and as the temperature continues to drop what could be better than sitting on the porch enjoying the last taste of summer with a frosty, locally brewed, seasonal summer favorite like Bell's Oberon Ale? Why, doing all of the above while wearing the new Bell's t-shirt you bought at their online general store, of course.

cyberM·I·N·D· designed and launched the Bell's General Store website over the summer. The website is available for viewing and ordering at: www.bellsbeer.com/store.asp

The general store sells Bell's logo T-shirts, sweatshirts (including the famous and ever-popular Bell's hoodie), hats, glassware, bandanas, Frisbees, stadium blankets, key chains, stickers, and much, much more.

Bell's Eccentric Café, Beer Garden, and General Store can be found on the corner of Kalamazoo Ave. and Porter St., in the heart of downtown Kalamazoo.

"Our ongoing goal is to brew thoughtfully, creatively and artistically, bringing an authentic and pleasant experience to all of our customers through our unique beers."
